"When you draw, form is the important thing; but in painting the first thing to look for is the general impression of colour." — GEROME

TO THE PUBLIC

An Effect is only momentary: so an impressionist tries to find his place. Two half-hours are never alike, and he who tries to paint a sunset on two successive evenings, must be more or less painting from memory. So, in these works, it has been the object of the artists to render faithfully, and thus obtain first records of effects widely differing, and often of very fleeting character.

A homage to the original 9x5 Impressionism Exhibition which opened at the Ruxton Rooms
on Swanston Street
August 17 1889
